

ICHIRO KAWACHI, MD, PhD

Ichiro Kawachi, PhD, MD, is Associate Professor of Health and Social Behavior, and the Director of the Harvard Center for Society and Health, both at the Harvard School of Public Health. Kawachi received his M.D. degree (with Distinction) in 1985, and a Ph.D. in epidemiology in 1991, both from the University of Otago, New Zealand.

Kawachi's research has focused on uncovering the social and economic determinants of population health. He is the co-editor (with Lisa Berkman) of the first textbook on Social Epidemiology, published by Oxford University Press in 2000, as well as a Reader on Income Inequality and Health, with Bruce Kennedy and Richard Wilkinson (The New Press, 1999). Oxford University Press published an edited volume on Neighborhoods and Health, in 2002.

Kawachi is the past recipient of the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation Investigator Award in Health Policy Research (1996), and the co-director of training at Harvard of the soon-to-be-launched RWJ Program in Health and Society Scholars. Kawachi has taught internationally, in Australia, Mexico, Chile, Taiwan, and New Zealand. He is a member of the Research Advisory Committee of the Pan-American Health Organization/WHO. He joined the MacArthur Foundation's Network on Socioeconomic Status and Health in 1998, where he has sought to investigate the macro-level determinants of health (income distribution, social cohesion, neighborhood environments), as well as psychosocial predictors of cardiovascular disease (job stress, social networks and support, and psychological factors).

Kawachi is currently Senior Editor (Social Epidemiology) of the journal Social Science & Medicine, as well as Editor pro tem of the American Journal of Epidemiology.